Position of the course

This course aims to broaden the knowledge of French Linguistics by considering the phenomenon of “variation” from different perspectives.

Contents

Four modules are proposed:
1. Description of the specificity of spoken French (and its registers) at the phonetic, morphological, lexical and, especially, syntactic-pragmatic level (prof. P. Lauwers; 10 h)
2. Description of the linguistic situation of French in Belgium (prof. P.Lauwers; 12.5 h).
3. Description of the linguistic situation of French in Africa (Prof. P. Hadermann; 5 h).
4. Description of the linguistic situation of French in Canada (Prof. P. Hadermann; 2.5

h) Initial competences

This course requires a solid insight in the functioning of linguistic systems and builds on "French Linguistics I" and "French Linguistics IV". Language proficiency level: C1.

Final competences

1 students have acquired insight in the various dimensions of language variation (with respect to the norm)
2 students have a sound factual knowledge of some important variants of contemporary French (esp. spoken French, Belgian French, French spoken in Africa)
3 students have a clear insight in the (sociolinguistic and historical) background of the variants of French, within the global situation of multilingualism
4 students understand that French is not a monolithic bloc but, instead, that there is more and more room for a polycentric vision within the broader framework of the "Francophonie"
5 students have the means to compare / to align their own variant with the other possible variants of French
6 students are able to synthesize a serious amount of information and to present it to a group in an interactive way (development of teaching skills) in academic French (C1).
7 students improve their French language proficiency by studying vocabulary related to colloquial French and Belgian French in a contrastive fashion.
