Teaching languages
Dutch

Keywords
Old Slavonic, linguistics

Position of the course
This course aims at providing a (passive) knowledge of Old Slavonic, the common written language of the Orthodox Slav world, through the study of the elementary grammar and the reading of adapted texts.

Contents
Old Slavonic is of major importance from a linguistic as well as from a cultural and historical point of view:
(1) it is very close to Common Slavonic, and thus fundamental for (diachronical) linguistics
(2) it was the only language for most Slav peoples, during and long after the Middle Ages, and nearly all the sources have been handed down in (a variant of) this language.

The elementary grammar (phonetics and phonology, morphology and syntax) is acquired by means of a syllabus. Since only a passive knowledge of the language is aimed at, the theory is almost immediately put into practice by reading texts in 'standardized' Old Church Slavonic. Only the oldest texts are eligible (as Old Church Slavonic splits into regional variants later on). Since the written language came about as a result of Christianization, these are mainly religious texts, such as the New Testament
