Teaching languages
- Dutch

Keywords
- Latin, phonology, morphology, Indo-European, Italic languages, language change

Position of the course
This course gives an overview of the development from Proto-Indo-European over proto-Italic to pre-literary Latin. The pronunciation and morphology of classical Latin are situated within a historical background, stressing the evolution of sounds and forms. This theoretical background is essential for the study of Latin at the Gent University, where a diachronic overview is presented of the use of Latin from preclassical to medieval times.

Contents
The course consists of four main sections: (1) general introduction on Proto-Indo-European and the main linguistic families descending from it; (2) Proto-Italic; the Latino-Faliscan and the Sabellic group: main similarities and diversities; (3) Characteristics of archaic Latin and discussion of selected epigraphic texts; discussion of the important Lex XII tabularum; (4) exercises on classical Latin phonology, morphology and syntax.

Initial competences
- Good command of classical Latin.

(Draft -- caution, this is not the final version)
