Position of the course

This introductory course offers a thorough introduction in the views of a number of influential metaphysical authors.

Contents

Metaphysics is the attempt to give an overarching image of the general structure of the world, and of the place of humans in it. We will discuss a few of the most influential of such attempts, coupled with the lecture of primary texts. We pay attention to both the resulting image and the methods used to construct these images. We will pay special attention to the relation of metaphysics to on the one hand an everyday and on the other hand a scientific (or natural philosophical) perspective on reality. We also consider the relations between the discussed authors, and the underlying historical evolutions.

Authors discussed: Plato, Aristotle, Descartes, Kant, Heidegger. Texts read: fragment from The Republic (Plato); fragments from Metaphysics (Aristotle); Méditations Métaphysiques (Descartes).

Initial competences

Sufficient knowledge of the history of philosophy to place the authors discussed.

Final competences

- 1 Being able to comment the primary texts read from the history of metaphysics.
- 2 Having knowledge of a number of crucial basic concepts and arguments from metaphysics.
- 3 Having insight in historical developments within metaphysical thinking.
- 4 Being able to correctly assess the possible views concerning the relation between everyday experience, natural philosophy, and metaphysics.
- 5 Having insight in the specific nature of metaphysics as a discipline.
