Position of the course

N2VT, translating into Dutch, refers to “stamvak Dutch Language Standardisation”, “stamvak Inleiding tekst en taal”, Applied Language Studies 1, “History of culture” “Translation technology” and also to translation from English and French into Dutch (BA1). For German, Italian, Russian, Spanish and Turkish this course unit forms the first acquaintance with the translation in the mother tongue (Dutch). The course provides a part that will be language independent during the first seminar in which the translation didactics and the most important translation strategies and concepts will be explained. Students will gain insight into norms that rule the translation market and will translate authentic text material referring to current topics in society. They also learn how to transfer cultural specific elements.

Contents

The basis method for the translation didactics in this course unit is the interpretative method developed by Lederer and Seleskovitch in combination with a comparative and functionalist method. This means that the lecturer will focus on specific translation problems that occur when we translate from German, English, French, Italian, Russian, Spanish and Turkish into Dutch. According to the interpretative method, translation is a rendering of an interpretation, of something that is (often) hidden in the source text. Students learn to reformulate and get acquainted with transfer of meaning and with the transformations of a source text into a target text. They learn to identify style and rhetoric figures in the source text and are stimulated to reflect on the text and the meaning it generates with the translator/reader. This reflecting attitude forms the basis for the translation of specialised texts (in the master programme). The students learn to work with the concept of skopos: the translation strategy is informed by the target and function of the text in the target culture. They learn about the meaning of the source text and about the identification of translation problems. They also learn about the application of translation strategies and about the production of a target text. In preparation for the seminar the students translate authentic texts at home. During the seminar the lecturer will comment their work (in powerpoint presentations).

Teaching methods

Extra information on the teaching methods

Students prepare a translation at home. During the seminar the lecturer gives a (powerpoint) presentation in which the student translations are put together in a contrastive way which makes it possible to compare different translations and to analyse the translation strategies. The lecturer will give attention to the errors that can occur during exam: source langue interference, mistranslation of polysemic words, interpretation, omissions, vocabulary, cultural references, etc. In each seminar the skopos will be discussed.

The theoretical part will be given online. The working groups on translation will be given on campus. Due to the coronacrises didactical work forms can change.
